About half of all physician practices in the country are now part of a larger network or health system. In this webinar, gain a clearer understanding of how this trend is progressing and what challenges face IDN-affiliated physician practices. You’ll learn about:

- The “volume to value” transition and how health systems and physician practices are navigating the shift
- Population health: why it’s important, and how it impacts care delivery
- The “primary care medical home” designation and what it requires physician offices to do
- Challenges in both patient experience and staff satisfaction
- Trends in physician compensation designed to keep doctors aligned with health system goals

Presenter:

Anthony Stavola, MD
Vice Chair
Carilion Clinic, Department of Family and Community Medicine

Carilion Clinic is a multispecialty physician group which includes more than 750 providers. The network has seven hospitals including Carilion Roanoke Memorial Hospital, the third-largest in Virginia, and a total of 1,026 licensed beds and $1.5 billion in net revenue.

Dr. Stavola is a board-certified family practitioner with additional certification in geriatrics. He has served as Regional Medical Director for Carilion Medical Group since 1996, responsible for seven primary care practices, as well as working on initiatives involving the entire medical group in areas including EMR implementation, quality improvement, and practice management. He is active with the American Medical Group Management Association and was a highly-rated speaker at HIDA’s 2015 Physician Office Market Conference. He was recognized as “Best Family Doctor” by Roanoke’s City magazine in 2008, 2009, and 2011.
